Preface

This dictionary has been specially prepared for those learning English up to the Intermediate level.

Language is made up of words (the vocabulary) and of the accepted ways of putting these words together (the syntax). We learn words and expressions in the mother tongue by hearing them used, again and again, in infancy, and always in particular situations. We are strongly motivated because we have to communicate. Words may have numerous meanings for many different situations. It is only when we have heard or seen a word repeatedly that we begin to know it.

For a foreign language (eg English for a German child) or for a second language (eg English for a Nigerian child in a home where English is spoken by the family), there are other ways of identifying words. The equivalent in the mother tongue may be given by the teacher, or found by the learner in a bilingual dictionary. By this means identification is immediate and can be (but is not always) accurate. This is a first step only, however. Until the learner can use the words confidently and accurately, until he has instant recognition and recall of the word, he does not know it.

A good teacher will use well-tried methods to give the meaning of new words without the use of the mother tongue. He may use drawings and diagrams. A very competent teacher may explain a new word by using other words already known. This is what a monolingual dictionary (such as this one) attempts to do.

What, then, are the advantages of a monolingual dictionary such as this, in which English words are dealt with in English? Modern textbooks encourage learners to think, write and speak in English only. This may be difficult at first but the rewards are well worth it. It is the more natural way of acquiring competence in a language. As soon as a learner has the confidence to read simple English sentences, he can use a monolingual dictionary if it provides simple definitions and notes to help him to use the vocabulary in context.

A bilingual dictionary has some claims to usefulness. There are some words for which there is usually a clear and unambiguous equivalent (tulip, panther, chisel, valve). But there are thousands of words with no exact equivalent, which, even when defined clearly, need examples before they are fully known. A word in isolation is a dead word. It comes to life when it occurs in a sentence. There are hundreds of verbs for which patterns must be learnt. Set is a short and easy-looking verb but if you look up set in this dictionary you will find that it has several meanings, that it is used in several sentence patterns, that it combines with adverbs and prepositions in meanings far removed from the simple usage of 'The sun sets in the west'. These phrasal verbs, set about/back/down/out, etc all need illustrative phrases or sentences to show the meaning. In this dictionary the illustrative phrases and sentences help the learner to become familiar with words in their normal contexts. He may know that the verb sever means 'cut'. He must learn, from seeing examples the contexts in which sever is correct. We do not 'sever meat at meals' but our government may 'sever diplomatic relations with a neighbouring country'.

Remember, there are very few real synonyms in English. Small bilingual dictionaries which give equivalents encourage errors. A good monolingual dictionary such as this one will not.

The learner may think that because a bilingual dictionary provides a quick and apparently complete answer to problems of word meanings he need not use a good monolingual dictionary. If he can be encouraged to use this dictionary systematically, he will soon see its advantages.

Acknowledgements

This dictionary is adapted from the Oxford Advanced Learner's Dictionary. This revision has made use of A G Gimson's system of phonetic transcription used in the 1980 Revised Impression of the parent volume. We are particularly grateful to A P Cowie for his advice during the preparation of the manuscript and to the many teachers throughout the world who have offered advice and suggestions and have commented on the first impression.

Finally, we are grateful to the staff of the computer department of Oxford University Press for their untiring work on the material.

The arrangement of the entries

Headwords

Headwords are printed in bold type:

fact fac-tion fac-tor

The bold dot (·) in the headword shows where the word may be divided in written English. It is usual to divide a word when it needs more space than is left at the end of a line.

fac-sim-ile false-hood

Where two headwords have the same spelling they are numbered:

fan¹ /fæn/ n

fan² /fæn/ vt, vi

Compounds

Compounds (whether written as one word, with a hyphen or as two separate words) are printed in bold type and listed in alphabetical order after the entry for the headword:

fam-ily /'fæmli/ n

family doctor, general practitioner.

family name, = surname.

family planning, (use of birth control for) planning the number of children, intervals between births, etc in a family.

family tree, genealogical chart.

Derivatives

Derivatives follow the headword entry in the same way:

fa-natic /fə'nætɪk/ n

fa-nati-cally /-kli/ adv

fa-nati-cism /-sɪzəm/ n [U] excessive enthusiasm; [C] instance of this.

Idiomatic expressions

Idiomatic expressions are included at the end of the appropriate definition and are printed in bold italic type:

gain² /geɪn/ vt, vi 1 obtain (something wanted or needed): ~ experience; ~ an advantage over a competitor. gain time, improve one's chances by delaying something, making excuses, etc. gain the upper hand, be victorious.

Phrasal verbs

Phrasal verbs are printed in bold italic type before the appropriate definition:

gain on/upon (a) get closer to (the person or thing pursued): ~ on the other runners in a race. (b) go faster than, get farther in advance of: ~ on the police.

Some verbs, such as be, bring, come, get, go, make, take, are used with a variety of prepositions and adverbial particles to form special expressions. These combinations are given as a separate section at the end of the entry for the verb and are listed in alphabetical order:

close³ /kləʊz/ vt, vi

5 (uses with adverbial particles and prepositions):

close down, (a) (of a factory, business, etc) stop production, shut completely. (b) (of a broadcasting station) stop transmitting: The time is just after midnight and we are now closing down. Hence, 'close-down n

close in, The days are closing in, getting shorter. close in on/upon, (a) cover on all sides: Darkness ~d in on us. (b) come near(er) and attack: The enemy ~d in on us.

Note the use of parentheses () and obliques / in idiomatic expressions and phrasal verbs.

The parentheses surround words which can be omitted when using the expression in a sentence.

fall² /fɔ:l/ vi fall flat (on one's face),

look² /lʊk/ vi, vt

look away (from sth),

look back (on sth).

The oblique is used to give optional words in an expression:

bar-gain /'bɑ:gɪn/ n [C] a good/bad bargain,

beaten /'bi:tɪn/ go off/keep to the beaten track,

Nouns

Noun entries are marked [C], [U], or [C,U].

[C] means that the noun has a singular and a plural form. It can be used with a, an, another and with numbers. Nouns used in these ways are countable.

[U] means that the noun does not have a plural form. It is used with some, a lot of, enough, etc. Nouns used in these ways are uncountable.

[C,U] means that the noun can be used as either countable or uncountable.

Adjectives

Adjectives sometimes have comparative or superlative forms by the addition of -r, -st; -er, -est; or -ier, -iest. The dictionary will tell you when this is possible by printing these endings in parentheses at the beginning of the entry.

blue¹ /blu:/ adj (-r, -st)

deep¹ /di:p/ adj (-er, -est)

funny /'fʌni/ adj (-ier, -iest)

A few adjectives have special comparative and superlative forms good¹ /ɡʊd/ adj (better, best)

bad¹ /bæd/ adj (worse, worst)

Irregular forms

Whenever the forms of a verb (past participle, present participle, past tense) are irregular, these forms are given at the beginning of an entry in parentheses:

break² /breɪk/ vt,vi (pt broke /brəʊk/, pp broken /'brəʊkən/)

drive² /draɪv/ vt,vi (pt drove /drəʊv/, pp ~n /'drɪvn/)

fry /fraɪ/ vt,vi (3rd person sing, present tense fries, pt,pp fried)

Doubled consonants

Many verbs that end in a single consonant have this letter repeated to make the past participle or the present participle. Some adjectives repeat the last consonant in the same way. The Dictionary shows this by printing the ending in parentheses:

flap² /flæp/ vt,vi (-pp-)

hot /hɒt/ adj (-ter, -test)

Style

Speaking and writing good English is not only a problem of grammatical correctness. The word or expression must be right for the particular context. Entries are marked formal, informal, slang, dated, etc to help you.

Often, the Dictionary will tell you which word is more usual:

gal /gæl/ n (dated informal) = girl.

val-iant /'væliənt/ adj brave (the usual word).

American variants for spelling, pronunciation and meaning are shown by (US) before the information.

Pronunciation

Each headword and derivative has a phonetic spelling of the word immediately after the ordinary spelling. Phonetic spelling is a way of writing so that one symbol always represents only one sound. By learning the symbols you will be able to pronounce the words in the Dictionary. A list of the phonetic symbols used in this Dictionary is printed on the inside cover for easy reference.

When a word has more than one syllable, one of them is pronounced with more force than the rest. This is called stress and the syllable which is stressed is shown with a stress-mark /' / before it in the Dictionary. In longer words, other syllables may also be pronounced with more force than the rest but this stress is not as strong as those marked /'/. The stress-mark /_ / is used to show this. So, /' / is used to mark the primary stress and /_ / is used to mark the secondary stress:

falsi-fi-ca-tion /fɜːlsɪfɪ'keɪʃn/ n [C,U]

fam-ili-ar-ity /fæmɪlɪ'ærəti/

Stress-marks are also given for compounds and expressions whenever this information is useful:

'fancy-free

'gad-about,

be 'in on,

'take sb 'down a peg (or two).

The pronunciations recommended are those which research has shown are the most common and the most useful for those learning English. If English people around you repeatedly use a pronunciation not given here, either discuss the choice with them or join them in their usage.

(r) In spoken British English an 'r' at the end of a written word (either as the final letter or in an -re ending as in fire) is not pronounced unless another word follows which begins with a vowel sound. To show this, the phonetic spelling has (r) at the end.

/-/ Hyphens preceding and/or following parts of a repeated transcription indicate that only the repeated part changes.
